WEDDING RITUALS

Weddings traditions aren't just limited to the first dance and the bouquet toss! If you're particularly charmed by certain customs, feel free to adopt it for your own "I do's" even if it is outside your heritage. Whether you choose an international ritual or create your own, you can be sure that any sentiment you feel strongly about can be made into a beautiful and poetic ritual as part of your celebration. When it comes to love and weddings, there are no borders.

BERSANDING MALAY CEREMONY

Origin: Malaysia

The bride and groom will sit together on a bridal couch known as 'Pelamin' which will be the centre stage of the whole ceremony. A tray of cooked yellow rice studded all over with red-dyed eggs are placed in front the Pelamin. This is to symbolise fertility. It is customarily to begin with the groom's procession with friends, relatives, musicians, and guests holding the bunga manggar (decorative flowers) and beating the kompang (Malay drums) to meet the bride who is already seated on the Pelamin. The couple will then be blessed with scented water and sandalwood paste. Each guest will receive a bunga telur (egg flower) which is a colourful dyed egg placed on a decorative flower with a stem made of fabric.

Vincent LaConte®

MANGAL PHERAS CEREMONY (WALK AROUND THE FIRE)

Origin: India

The couple makes four Mangal Pheras around the fire in a clockwise direction representing four goals in life: Dharma, religious and moral duties; Artha, prosperity; Kama, earthly pleasures; Moksha, spiritual salvation and liberation. The bride leads the Pheras first, signifying her determination to stand first beside her husband in all happiness and sorrow.

TEA CEREMONY

Origin: China

The tea ceremony is a significant event in a traditional Chinese wedding and allows the newly weds to show respect to their parents. A newlywed couple will kneel in front of both sets of parents and serve tea to them, as well as their older relatives. In return the parents will present the couple with gifts and a blessing.
